

Biographical Information – Loraine C. Mion, PhD, RN, FAAN

Lorraine C. Mion, PhD, RN, FAAN is the Independence Foundation Professor of Nursing, School of Nursing at Vanderbilt University. Dr. Mion has been funded as a co-investigator or principal investigator on a number of studies to examine structural and/or practice issues impacting geriatric patient outcomes in acute care settings. Her major focus of work has been on the use of physical restraints with additional studies in patient falls, delirium and patient-initiated device disruption. Dr. Mion has more than 80 peer-reviewed articles, as well as numerous abstracts, editorials, and book chapters. Dr. Mion serves on the Editorial Board for the Journal of Gerontological Nursing and serves as a manuscript reviewer for a number of medical, nursing and gerontology journals. Dr. Mion also serves on the geriatric advisory board for the Society of Hospital Medicine and the Nurses Improving Care of HealthSystems Elders Program through the John A. Hartford Institute of Geriatric Nursing. She has served as both a clinical and research mentor to graduate and doctoral nursing students specializing in geriatrics.